I was trying to cut a slice of cake and said "Got a knife?" He replied "Oh yeah – I got a knife!"

Brother, ever since then he's been tellin' this story as if it was some kind of passing of the mantle -- like he was really one of the most dangerous poets in America.

the mountain in this big Texas town would be a hill in Colorado but the mountains there are small - compared to those in Nepal.

a new muse

music flows thru bodies like blood songs belong in bones po's hold old souls taken away again and returned home

there may be tools to speed things up ten or a hundred times yet no one will care to use them ~ Tao Te Ching

anti- technology

don't read poetry on-line lean on a tree outside, and write* your brain is faster than a microchip your soul is older than endless information your face is more beautiful than a monitor your fingers would rather be tapping my shoulder.

A Poet Is An Architect

"Dream of Architecture" - Marjorie Welish

If you say you're a poet when asked what you do people will come at you and say
"Oh I'm a poet, too!", or even worse, "I've been known to write the occasional verse."

It's like if you met an architect at a wine and cheese tasting and said "What do you do?", and the architect said
"I'm an architect", and you said "Oh I am too!
I make tiny houses out of toothpicks."
(Respect a poet is an architect.)

billy is so sweet he actually came made with extra-wide teddy bear feet tho we wear about the same size shorts & shoes my favorite ones fit too narrow for him to use he sneaks around the house in them, anyway relocating things that i've put in place

& then has a look at my little looking face
